夢見の物語

お医者さん

During the second half of their summer job,

Kawotero and Rikaido started to understand the horses' many gestures and expressions.

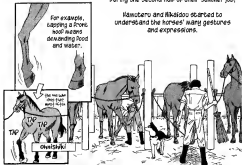

For example, tapping a front hoof means demanding food and water.

That means they must have left.

TAP

TAP

Ohai Shiki!

Or if the horse stares at something and raises its ears, it means it has seen or heard something strange.

Flicking its ears backwards while showing its teeth means it's angry.

Piss
Spoozie is a coward and worry-wart.

We can reuse clear old bedding by using their pee. But in Ohtsuka's case, he would make a mess all over. Moreover, he's scared his dung and pee to eat them together and march around. It just doesn't work well.

Later I just rubbed you off.

I want to pee.

Sometimes Spoozie would feel like rolling in the dirt too. It's hard to tell whether he likes cleanliness or not.

Then he would self-destruct by kicking his own ass. Pain or starvation? Stomachache? Guilt? In that kind of horse.

In Russell's case, his fear isn't expressed by aggression or attacks but is suppressed internally as his nervousness degenerates.

This time because there is no ass, his stomach is acting up.
